

Turn “how much will it cost?” into a booked job.

Websites built for South African electricians. One page per customer type, prices shown upfront, and WhatsApp booking one tap away.

Scan to tap through the live example on your phone.

Live example: Voltguard Electrical, a complete electrician website built with Voltguard Web.

One site, five customers

Homeowners, agents, commercial, builders and landlords each get their own page.

Prices upfront

Visitors see the ballpark before they call, so fewer leave for the next electrician.

One tap to book

WhatsApp and call buttons sit in the header, the hero and the footer.

Most electrician websites are a logo and a phone number.

Your next customer is on their phone, comparing three electricians. The one that answers their question first gets the call. Here is what usually goes wrong, and what we build instead.

One message for everyone

A homeowner with a tripping DB, an estate agent chasing a CoC and a body corporate all want different things.

The fix: A page written for each customer type.

"Call for a quote"

Visitors don't want to phone just to learn the ballpark. Many leave and try the next electrician.

The fix: Selected pricing shown on every audience page.

Trust has to be asked for

Is he licensed? Insured? How fast will he come? Most sites bury it or skip it.

The fix: Your licence, cover and guarantees up front.

Too many steps to book

Contact forms and hidden numbers cost you the impatient, urgent jobs.

The fix: WhatsApp and call buttons on every page.
